Loganberry juice, the genuine Oregon product, is being served this week to the thirty ones in the coliseum at the Chicago national convention. The fact is, if the delegates want anything to quench their thirst in the way of a soft drink, loganberry juice is the only liquid to be had as the Chicago agents have the coliseum concession for the Pheasant brand. A car load of the juice was purchased for sale at the coliseum and the attention of the delegates is called to the loganberry quarters by a sign 50 feet long. It happens that the superintendent of the coliseum was one of the party of Shriners who passed through Salem a few months ago and who were served with loganberry juice. He was so pleased with the drink that he readily gave permission for its sale during the convention.

PROGRESSIVES HAD TO ACT ON DRY PLANK

Many Delegates Dodged But Motion to Table Prevailed 523 to 82

Auditorium, Chicago, June 9.—By an overwhelming majority, the progressive national convention tabled by roll call vote on a motion to include in the bull moose national platform a prohibition amendment.

North Dakota delegates forced the roll call and were seconded by Colorado and Texas.

Extended debate preceded the roll call and approval of the platform; the scheduled Roosevelt statement and action on the peace conference with the republicans was held up by the roll call.

Members of the delegates apparently hesitated to go on record for the prohibition amendment, and made a rush for the exits.

Some of the delegates felt at once that the roll call would not be brought about but that the question was introduced only in the general policy of "stalling" the conference until the conference committee had time to act.

Delegate Stewart of Minnesota spoke for the plank.

"My wife told me," Stewart began in a cracked hoarse voice and the delegates kidded him as he proceeded. Chester H. Rowell of California said of the delegates' attention to the fact that there already was one party pledged to prohibition and had not got very far.

"It wouldn't be good politics to adopt this plank," he said. "Don't let us shy at prohibition," Rowell said. "In Europe they are leaning the lesson. They cannot make munitions or fight wars in a drink-sodden nation."

Amid shouts of "Give us the question!" the California dry spokesman left the platform.

"We are doing in this convention what has never been done before in any political convention," said Chairman Robbins announcing the vote would come on the prohibition plank.

Oscar R. Handley of Alabama replied to Rowell and pleaded for rejection of the plank.

Dean Lewis of Pennsylvania, chairman of the platform committee, closed the debate, speaking against the plank.

trailer, with 41 seconds. Whether Hughes was to be put over was the question that was most persistently put as delegates and spectators in the crowded galleries patiently listened to the oratory.

Looks Like Hughes.

Outside of the favorite son camps, the general feeling was that the justice would be the nominee.

That Hughes would not be accepted by the progressives was generally conceded.

Colonel Roosevelt was to be placed in nomination by Senator Fall of New Mexico, and with this impending, the crowd stuck close to see what would happen.

Senator Borah was back on the floor of the republican convention after addressing the progressives during the morning. He described his trip to the progressive pavilion as merely a little personal excursion, and without significance.

The greatest confusion reigned outside the Coliseum, where delegates, officers of the convention and newspaper men who had left the hall, found themselves barred when they tried to enter again by Fire Marshal O'Connor's order to close the door.

A mob of nearly 1,000 tried unsuccessfully, pleading, pushing, roaring of indignation and threats in an effort to pass the police guards.
